Once Jesus was asked, "Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven?"

Jesus invited a little child to stand among them. "Truly I tell you," He said, "unless you change and become like little children, you will never enter the kingdom of heaven". (Mark 9:1–3)

We all know that the mind of the children are pure and untainted by the worldly vices.

However, as we grow in our lives, we are taught to be selfish and think only about ourselves.

Related Why don't Indian citizens raise their voice against the government failing to do its duty?

Damn good question!

There are two reasons for this —

Reason No.1

- Indian Crab Mentality

There was once a crab competition for all countries in the world. All countries sent their crabs to compete. Then someone noticed that the stall from India had a huge box, but it was open. There was no lid for it to keep the crabs in. So people asked the man standing there Why is there no lid for these crabs. They may escape and spread here and there. The man replied , These are Indian crabs. They don't need a lid. They are too busy pulling each other down.They wont escape.

Even if some of us tried to raise voice against issues like unemployment, inflation etc, there in lies the rub — call it envy/jealousy, we will be pulled down by the people around us.

There is a saying in both hindi and urdu – jaisi praja, waisa raja.

Jaisi awaam, waise hukumraan.

You will always find people gathering on the streets against some political/religious leader giving a controversial statement. You will find people passionately protesting – ‘How dare he insult our community?’ ‘We must chop off his nose!’ etc, etc. But nobody will take the streets for the betterment of hospitals, quality education, rising unemployment, clean water etc. Even if the average guy runs into debt trying to pay the hospital bills, he might entertain the idea of suicide, but he will never think of protesting! Its kinda tragic that instead of competing against superpowers like the USA, China, Japan...the yardstick for comparison has shifted to Pakistan, Bangladesh and Afghanistan.

These is how people from other democracies come out in protest.

If overnight demonization had happened in these countires, and people died standing in long queues — instead of showing apathy, these people would've flooded the streets in protest against the govt. Demanding immediate resignation of the PM! But since the people from the Indian subcontinent have a legacy of being numb to these things, no one came out to protest, unless ofcourse it was for some religious, communal purpose etc.

Cos we have gotten accustomed to having govts that don't serve the public for a few hundred years by now. Ever since the 1740s, thr Gol has been for the multinational, of the multinational and whatever adjective you plan on using.

You'll only complain about RJ heat if you're not used to it and if it's something sudden for you. Newspapers talking heat wave never seen in 200 years etc and all of us are carrying forth our lives as if it's just one extra day.

Because nobody asks "What is good for this county?".

Everyone asks "What is good for my state, religion, caste, language, culture..... "

Because this had never been a nation before 1947, whatever we pretend.

Besides, everyone wants everything easy. Nobody had the guts to tell them that nothing is free and everyone has to work to get what he wants. Unfortunately, our politicians offered easy life and free things in exchange for votes. The illiterate, gullible and selfish people were happy with it.

The result? Nothing except the population has improved.

Related Why are people always protesting in India?

If you want the basic gist of it without too much of a scholarly answer, it's because Indian society is an extremely divided society.

You have people wanting more reservation and now want reservation in the private sector, because why not? That'll definitely look attractive to foreigners who want to invest or open a company in India.

You have people wanting less reservation and who will go to the other extreme of even insulting Dr. Ambedkar and destroying his statue, despite the fact that reservation today as we know it isn't even what he had in mind when he came up with the concept.

You have people that discriminate based on religion.

You have widespread corruption and many people who benefit from this corruption. I don't think many people realise what a powerful tool of going anti-corruption and all that other high horse stuff is as a rhetoric for politicians. Mao used it as a rhetoric after all. I'm very happy that people are learning from the Maoists. Oh you want to accuse me of being an urban Naxalite even though I live in another country and hate Maoism. That's a brilliant idea.

You have people that are too ideologically biased to the point where they place the ideology over the country.

You have people one week who'll love the police and praise them over doing extra-judicial killing and the next week hate the police.

People aren't happy with the opposition party's past as they feel they didn't represent Hindus well enough and are oppressed.

People aren't happy with the Hindu nationalist parties as they feel they aren't doing enough for the Hindus.

People don't like the rich and the capitalists, this even extends to the Indian far right by the way.

People still think India is socialist even though it's abandoned a planned economy some time ago, people own/owned private properties, and for that matter was never even close to the definition of socialism (workers own the means of production). Heck Nehruvian socialism was based off of a visit to Lenin's USSR in 1922. That was anything but socialist. If you want the closest thing to that definition you might want to look into the CNT.

People love capitalism and big business and want the government and their social programs out but can't understand why our Global Hunger Index is so bad. Heck India surpasses Venezuela.

People feel liberals are the problems and are pseudo-secular while they have a wonderful book called Essentials of Hindutva by Veer Savarkar which is definitely the definition of secularism especially the lines about Muslims and Islam, it even has a line about Jews as well.

People declare bandh whenever and it does affect people. Heck even doctors get attacked if they are out while there's a bandh.

People attack Doctors and economists while respecting alternative medicine and pseudo-economists more. People have even killed Doctors. Just ask that Doctor in Assam.

People rely on WhatsApp university to get their info vs academic or scholarly sources or at least Quorans that try to use them.

People don't even question how media generates info and how info can be disseminated for the sake of interest groups. Ahh what do I know, it's just conspiracy theory after all right, not like you can search for this on Google and search for political theories that can provide some basis for this kind of reasoning, right?

Oh and I'm looking forward to seeing the comments down below accusing me of being a libtard even though I've never identified as a liberal. But who cares? Got to have those upvotes on my comment and down vote this answer to oblivion. It's those damn liberals that are censoring my answers right?

In conclusion, I can come up with many more reasons but, dental extraction (which I've experienced) is less of a pain to deal with than making sense of Indian politics and understanding why there are so many damned protests.

Trust me, take the dental extraction at least there's an anesthetic to try and numb the pain.

Related Why can't people of India protest against caste based reservation system?

Yes , we should protest against caste based reservation. Let's protest.

Wait a minute ?

Caste based reservation exists because caste based discrimination of lower caste by upper caste is practiced in India by Indian society.

Ok, then against what should I protest then ?

Should i protest against caste based discrimination of lower caste by upper caste ? If so, who will heed to my cry ? Will upper caste change all of sudden because we protest ?

Less chance of heeding to our protest.

Yes, I found the Villain in reservation...It is the Caste.

Yes, because of existence of caste, do people discriminate people (based on caste). What if caste system and caste are eradicated ? Then they wont discriminate on the basis of caste.

Thank you for helping me out.

Yes, we need to protest against Caste system. People should give up their caste and caste based pride. Since caste is given up, then caste based profession and pride like Brahmins as temples's priest, Kshatriya groups like Rajputs will stop owning Padmavati as their sole princess (So then Padmavati is the princess for all Indians). Then anyone can marry anyone in India irrespective of caste.

Wow. It was a moment of awakening.

Lets start protest against caste system. I m Joining you. When are you going to lead us ? How are we going to protest ?
